PORT'S CORNER.

The Old King. A lonely King is the Winter old, With his stern and frosty visage cold His aged head wears an icy crown, And his brow, a harsh, forbidding frown. Regal and sad, on his marble throne, He sitteth forsaken, and alone.

The Summer-she is a wilful child, Of nature passionate, warm, and wild; She mocks at her father's thin white hair, Bleached by ages of grief and care-Mocks, when he asks for a single flow'r, To gladden his snow encrusted bower. Her smiling vales yield no bloomy branch To circle his realms of avalanche; No fragrance droppings, no sunny gleams, People the old man's sombre dreams.

But Autumn was gentle, fair and meek, With tender eye, and a blushing cheek, Well loved, stern winter, her step of grace The pensive leveliness of her face; Gliding along in her golden veil, Lovingly beautiful; fair, but frail, Fading away, with the crimson fall Of the forest leaves -her mourning pall; Gently she died on his rugged breast, Softly, and sweetly was laid to rest.

Yet there is one, who loveth him still; Who humors the old man's captious will Mirth-loving Spring! with her joyous tread, Who garlands her father's frosty head, She spreadeth her dew-pearled vestments

His woe-stricken visage fain to hide; Springing away from his fond embrace With laughing glee in her merry face ; Tossing the May-bloom in childish sport, Speeding away to her fairy court. Flinging back beams of violet-dew, Shining memories, silverly blue. The old man heareth the song afar, As he stands without the crystal bar Of youth's elysiumed realms of bliss, Which never -oh! never can be his. Poor, foolish King! in his fruitless race Round old eternity's rugged base; Doomed, like Salathiel's ghost, to hear That ceaseless prophecy; 'Tarry here!' Norfolk, Jan. 1854.

AGRICULTURAL.

Agricultural Societies.

We see from a number of our State exchanges that steps have been taken in several counties for the organization of County Agricultural Societies. Such organizations are already in successful operation in a few counties. Some of the Agricultural Societies formed in years past have been reorganized of late and started again with a fresh impulse. It is gratifying to see this degree of interest that has been awakened in the subject of agricultural improvement.

Much of the credit of this is due to the efforts of our State Agricultural Society, and may be attributed in a high degree to the great success attending their late exhibition. A new impetus was given to the cause on that occasion, and its happy influences are now apparent throughout the State. The large number of intelligent farmers assembled at the late State Agricultural Fair, carried with them to distant parts of the State the same commendable spirit manifested during the session of the State Agricultural Society, and we now see it exhibited in the formation of Agricultural Societies for their respective counties,-a move which cannot fuil to be productive of much good to the agricultural interest of the State. We have seen what a creditable show our farmers can make at a State Fair, and it gives assurance that to a proportionate extent they can do credit to themselves and to their occupation in County Fairs. The latter, we have no doubt, will be followed by results alike benefical to those attending the exhibition of the State Agricultural Society. We hope, ere long, to see such Societies formed and kept up in every county of the State, and that for each successive year we may be able to boast of so grand an exhibition of the Agricultural industry of North Carolina as that of last October,

The advantages that will accrue to the State, from a proper appreciation of her agricultural interests, are too numerous to recount in a brief notice of the subject. The increased value of our lands is a weighty consideration. The achievement of that object will surely follow the awakening of additional interest in the cause of Agriculture. In many parts of the State where this spirit of improvement has manifested itself, the value of every acre of land has been greatly enhanced. The landed wealth of the State has in many instances been more than doubled, while the yield therefrom, has been increased to an extent that more than compensates for the expenses of improvement. The wealth of the farmer has at the same time been promoted just as much, to all practical purposes, as though so many more dollars had been put into his pocket. His improved land will bring two dollars for one, before it was improved, should be see proper to dispose of it-furnish him with a safe investment for his capital, and yield, perhaps a hundred per cent, over what it did in an unimproved state.

The additional capacity of these lands to sustain population is a consequence that must also greatly promote the interests of the State at large. In place of our citizens emigrating to the extent they have done in former years, they will be induced to devote that labor and means to the improvement of their native State which has hitherto added much in building up other States, from the mista-ken notion that N. C. was two poor for them to remain in her limits with any hope of making a living, or at all events a fortune. But as we before have had occasion to remark, it is becoming apparent to our people that it is just as cheap and equally as profitable to improve the lands they have as to open out others in a new country. Whatever may have been the opinion in former years which induced the citizens of N. C. to abandon their own State for more inviting fields in the far West, they can no longer have the same force. The means are now within their power for making their present homes as comfortable, as attractive, and as productive as any to be found elsewhere. The additional facilities for enriching their lands by the use of newly discovered manures, the saving of labor by the invention of newly improved agricultural instruction, from which the products of the State can be conveyed cheaper and more readily to market, afford to agriculturists advantages that are now being properly appreciated by the people throughout the State.
